The company now at the Academy of Music is practically the same as that which made us happy last season, the only important change being in the part of Theophilus. Last year that famous English comedian, Dallas Welford, made our sides ache; this season, we laugh at Phil. H. Ryley in the part. Welford's appearance, as well as his finished work, added immensely to the joyous absurdity of the whole thing, but Mr. Ryley gives a clean, clear-cut, and artistic performance—his singing, or talking, of the "Poor Weak Mortals" song was, in particular, beyond criticism.
